ANNA HAMMAN

Anna Hamman attended the United States Air Force Academy. Upon graduation, in 2003, she entered the United States Air Force. Anna completed six years of active duty service, including deployment to Iraq as an Intelligence Analyst. Anna has been a competitive swimmer since she was 10 years old. Over the years, and particularly following the birth of her first child, Anna developed widespread pain along her groin, hips, and lower back. She sought treatment as these problems progressed in severity. Despite being active for many years, she made the proactive decision to leave the Air Force once the military medical community began suggesting pelvic fusion surgery to "fix" her problems. Anna continued to seek medical treatment in the allopathic and osteopathic communities, as well as extensive chiropractic and physiotherapy. Unfortunately, these treatments were all minimally successful at best. Anna then turned to Prolotherapy and has received outstanding results.
